

Brent Cross Cricklewood Transformation Update

Last call to take part in public realm consultation

London's newest train station, Brent Cross West, is due to be completed this year and the station's western entrance will be located close to Decathlon and Edgware Road. The team are now looking for views from residents and businesses on the public realm in this area of the station.

The public realm consultation launched earlier in the month and will be open until Monday, 31 January at 11:59pm.

The proposals

The design aims to create an attractive, welcoming, safe environment. Although the space is limited we are proposing to include landscaping, high quality paving, seating, waste bins and lighting.

Other flexible features include cycle parking to accommodate a range of cyclists, a coffee cart or other retail offer, an accessible drop-off bay, and raised zebra crossing which can all be adapted as the wider area changes in future.

Have your say

You can see the plans and complete our short survey on Engage Barnet.

Feedback will then be used to refine the public realm design before a planning application is submitted.

Brent Cross West station progress

This week the Brent Cross West team reached another landmark moment when they began to install the station's roof cladding.

Over the festive period the team were busy installing the last concourse beams and the roof steel work to complete the station's 'skeleton'. The decking needed to allow them to lay the concrete on the concourse floor was finished and the floor is now in place. Find out more about Brent Cross West here.

Be part of The Flourishing Index

At Brent Cross Town, we are pleased to be supporting The University of Manchester on a new research study which aims to create a new measurement tool to help understand community wellbeing.
